

No need for outside intervention: Justice Joseph

KOCHI, Jan 13: Justice Kurian Joseph, one of the four senior Supreme Court judges who virtually revolted against the country's Chief Justice over "selective" case allocation and certain judicial orders, today said there was no need for outside intervention to solve the problem.

A day after he and the three other judges took the unprecedented step of addressing a press conference, Justice Joseph expressed confidence that the issues raised by them would be resolved.

"An issue was raised. Those concerned have listened to it. Such actions would not occur in future. So (I) believe that the issue has been settled," he told reporters here when asked about ways to sort out the issues raised by them.

"There is no need for outside intervention to solve the matter because its a matter (that) occurred within an institution. Necessary steps would be taken by the institution itself to sort it out," Justice Joseph said, when asked if outside intervention was required to solve the matter.

The matter was not brought to the attention of the President of India as he has no constitutional responsibility over the Supreme Court or the judges of the Apex Court, Justice Joseph said.

He said there was no constitutional lapse from the part of Chief Justice of India but convention, practice and procedure has to be followed while carrying out his responsibility.

"We just brought that matter to his attention," he said on the sidelines of the silver jubilee celebrations of the Major Archbishop Status of the Syro-Malabar Church at Kakkannad near here.

Justice Joseph said the judges acted solely in the interest of judiciary and justice.

"As some of you suggested it was a step for correction. The issue will end with the correction," he said.(PTI)
