Yahoo! Hack India to be held in Hyderabad

NEW DELHI, July 7:

Programmers, developers, designers from across the industry and students from top technical universities in India will gather at Hyderabad for a twoday hacking event.

Over 1,000 developers from across 20 states had signed up to programmers, participate in the sixth edition of 'Yahoo! Hack India" from July 13, of which 250 best hackers have been selected after an entry-level coding challenge.

These hackers will now participate in the two-day event which brings forth a series of technical workshops, followed by a nonstop 24-hour coding Hackathon on July 13 and 14," a statement said.

For the first time, Yahoo! Hack India is being organised in cyber city Hyderabad. This will be Yahoo!'s first hack event in India hosted outside Bangalore, where Yahoo! has its second largest research and development centre.

Due to overwhelming response from developers across India in the last five years, this hack events to cover more Indian cities over the next few

"This year will see two external hack events by Yahoo! in India, one in Hyderabad and another in Bangalore later in this year. The event brings together developers, designers from across the industry, start ups and students from the top technical universities," it

"Hackers team up to turn their ideas into a working prototype, or hack, as it's called in just 24 hours. It gives developers a chance to work together and build applications and product ideas from scratch using marketleading technologies from Yahoo! as well as other technologies, to develop something cool that can potentially solve a real-world problem that impacts Internet users," it said.

The two-day event involves a hacking competition using a great collection of new web tools, services and APIs (Application Programmable Interface), as well as data from Yahoo! had decided to expand around the web. (PTI)
