Amarinder Singh's victory in the recent Punjab Assembly polls had resonated even in Union Territory, said a senior official here.

The victory has added momentum to the party's efforts to achieve a comfortable majority in the forthcoming Jammu and Kashmir Assembly polls. Amarinder Singh, who was earlier the chief minister of Punjab, has been instrumental in the party's recent victories in the Union Territory.

A senior official said that the victory had given a boost to the party's morale and demonstrated the strength of the party's organization.

On the other hand, the defeat of the ruling Jammu and Kashmir People's Democratic Party (PDP) and the National Conference (NC) in the polls had further weakened the credibility of these parties in the region.

The Union Territory, which was earlier ruled by the PDP, has been under the control of the PDP and the NC for the past several decades.

However, the defeat of these parties in the recent polls has paved the way for the development of a new political narrative and has challenged the established political order in the region.

The victory of the ruling party has also given a fillip to the party's efforts to establish a strong base in the Union Territory and to promote its ideology of development and progress.

The party has also made steady progress in the region and has been able to consolidate its position by focusing on the development of the region and the welfare of its people.

The party's victory has also provided a strong impetus to the party's efforts to strengthen its organizational structure and to ensure the participation of all sections of society in the political process.

The party has also made efforts to promote the ideology of development and progress and to ensure the welfare of all sections of society.

The party has also made steady progress in the region and has been able to consolidate its position by focusing on the development of the region and the welfare of its people.

The party's victory has also provided a strong impetus to the party's efforts to strengthen its organizational structure and to ensure the participation of all sections of society in the political process.

The party has also made efforts to promote the ideology of development and progress and to ensure the welfare of all sections of society.

The victory of the ruling party has also given a fillip to the party's efforts to establish a strong base in the Union Territory and to promote its ideology of development and progress.

The party has also made steady progress in the region and has been able to consolidate its position by focusing on the development of the region and the welfare of its people.

The party's victory has also provided a strong impetus to the party's efforts to strengthen its organizational structure and to ensure the participation of all sections of society in the political process.

The party has also made efforts to promote the ideology of development and progress and to ensure the welfare of all sections of society.